"Why here," said Mrs. Spoonendyke, "What's this?" and she untied the towel and took it off his neck. "You must have put it there when you were shaving," and Mrs. Spoonendyke smiled sweetly as he lord growled his way through the rest of his toilet.

WHERE'S THE TOWEL?
Mr. Spoonendyke in an Awkward State of Embarrassment.
From the Brooklyn Eagle.
"Now, my dear," said Mr. Spoonendyke, "just wait until I wash my face and hands and I'll be ready, and Mr. Spoonendyke primed around before the glass, putting on the finishing touches, for the worthy couple were getting ready for the theatre.

"Where—where—where's the towel?" grasped Mr. Spoonendyke, holding his head down and clawing around with both hands. "What—what's become of the towel?" he spluttered, rasping handfuls of soap out of his eyes.

Mrs. Spoonendyke glanced at the rack and saw that the towel was gone. "I don't believe there's a towel up here," she commenced.

"What'd y's pose I'm going to do?" howled Mr. Spoonendyke. "Think I'm going to the theatre looking like a soda fountain? Gin me something to wipe on, will ye? Dog gast the soap! I've got my mouth full! Ain't y' going to get a towel? Going to let me hang out and dry like an undershirt?"

"Wait, and I'll ring for one," said Mrs. Spoonendyke, toiling away at the bell. Be patient for a moment.

"How's a man going to be patient with his eyes boiling full of soap? What'd y' mean by keeping house like this? Think I'm going to stand around here till winter and then freeze up? Gimme something to wipe on. Fetch me a door. Tear up the carpet. Gimme a shirt. Where's the bed-spread? Dod gast the towel!" and Mr. Spoonendyke tore the shams off the pillows, but being smooth they slid around on his visage as though they were skates.

"What am I going to do with these," he yelled. "I won't be dry in four months," and he grasped the sheet and rubbed his eyes as if he were polished silver. "Ain't you got something coarser?" and he hauled the flannel blankets off and got the wool in his mouth, and finally he emerged with great globs of soap hanging to his forehead and chin.

"Never mind dear," consoled Mrs. Spoonendyke. "You're all right now. Take this hankerchief and wipe your face."

"Oh! I'm all right ain't I?" raved Mr. Spoonendyke. "You've only got
